FOREWORD

KAPPA-74, a conference, will be conducted at CINCPAC Headquarters, Camp H. M. Smith, Honolulu, Hawaii during the period 9 December - 13 December 1974.

Preparations for the conference are being directed by Brigadier General Lee E. Surut, USA, Chief, Studies, Analysis, and Gaming Agency; and supervised by Colonel Charles A. Webster, USMC, Chief, Politico-Military Division (PMD).

The materials contained in this document do not necessarily represent the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; the Studies, Analysis, and Gaming Agency; or any other Government agency.

INTRODUCTION

1. General.

a. Politico-military simulations are manual exercises in which teams, representing the national command authorities of designated nations, meet and discuss hypothetical crisis situations presented in scenarios.

b. The Politico-Military Division of the Studies, Analysis, and Gaming Agency, Organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, is responsible for the preparation, conduct, analysis, and reporting of interagency, politico-military simulations. These simulations are sponsored by the Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff.

c. Extensive research is conducted in preparation for each simulation -- both in Washington and in the field. Officials are interviewed for ideas and suggestions to be used in preparing scenarios and for identification of major issues and problems facing the United States in the region under consideration.

2. Objectives.

a. The basic purpose of politico-military simulations is to provide a forum wherein key officials concerned with international security affairs can openly and candidly exchange ideas; examine controversial programs, objectives, and policies; and surface new approaches to the resolution of anticipated future problems. The intent of politico-military simulations is to alert, inform, and educate decisionmakers through the collective analysis of ideas, concepts, and selected aspects of national security policy.

b. Politico-military simulations are not intended to be predictive -- at least not in the aggregate sense. For example, some simulations may involve overt aggression of a type that stretches the imagination. This is not intended to suggest that such aggression is likely to occur under the conditions depicted or, if it did occur, that the particular strategies employed by the adversary, or other countries involved, are most probable or likely. The simulations have a broad context -- in effect, a set of initial assumptions which may range from a low probability situation to a crisis this nation could be expected to face. From this initial position, events originating during the simulation result from the interaction of team and control players.

3. Organization.

a. Participants are assigned to teams representing the nations directly involved and a Control Group representing other nations, international organizations, and other influencing factors. At a pre-simulation briefing, all team members are briefed on the background situation and on functional procedures.

b. The point of departure for each simulation is an initial scenario prepared specifically for each participating team. These scenarios outline hypothetical situations requiring teams to make decisions and to re-evaluate US policy within crisis situations set as far in the future as possible so as to allow players freedom of action with respect to today's policy. They are intended to be plausible and challenging, thereby stimulating discussion among the participants.

c. When the simulation starts and teams meet, time is stopped. Team discussions lead to preparation of a written message to Control which outlines the team's appraisal of the situation and its response to the events depicted in terms of strategy to be employed, specific actions to be taken, and contingencies identified in anticipation of the opposition's moves.

d. The Control Group assesses each team message and prepares a scenario projection outlining a new situation which may occur a few days, a week, month, or years later, and which will require the teams to reassess the situation and undertake appropriate actions.

e. Control has wide latitude in shaping developments, but attempts to advance the situation consistent with the actions and philosophies of the playing teams. While the initial scenario attempts to portray a sufficiently serious crisis to get the simulation moving, additional Control inputs may be necessary to get conservative teams off "dead center" or to examine other thought provoking ideas in subsequent moves.

f. Based on Control's scenario projection, the teams meet again to determine their next set of actions. This process is repeated for each of three moves.

4. Critique. Every simulation is concluded with a critique which provides an opportunity for participants to exchange opinions, comment on relevant hypothetical events, and discuss related "real-life" questions.

5. Reporting. Following the simulation, a Final Report and a film briefing are prepared to serve as the basis for follow-up studies and actions. They may be useful for analysis of contingency plans or helpful in pointing up intelligence and other program requirements for interested military and civilian departments, agencies, and commands.

6. Functions of Participants.

a. Control Group.

(1) The Conference Director heads the Control Group. He is responsible for overall direction of the exercise and for moderating the critique.

(2) Every member of Control has the important task of contributing ideas, but the Director makes the final decision. He relies on the Project Staff Representative (PSR) for advice in keeping discussions on schedule and in steering deliberations through the consideration of political, military, economic, psychological, and other factors appropriate to the simulation.

FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY

(3) The mission of the Control Group is to ensure that the simulation proceeds in a logical, orderly manner, and that its objectives are achieved. Control is specifically required to:

(a) Answer any substantive questions which may arise during the team meetings.

(b) Decide on the outcome of opposing team actions.

(c) Determine and make known the relevant actions or reactions of countries not represented by a team, international organizations, and other influences appropriate to scenario events.

(d) Decide how far to "move the calendar ahead" for the next period of team deliberations, and prepare the appropriate scenario projections describing intervening events.

b. Player Teams.

(1) Team Captains. A Captain is designated for each team. They serve as moderators or discussion leaders and are responsible for guiding their teams in the development of logical courses of action within established time limits. They also bear ultimate responsibility for team messages to Control.

(2) Team Members. Participants are assigned to the particular team (or Control) where their expertise is needed. An effort is made to balance the teams equally between military and civilian participants, and insofar as possible, to give representation to differing points of view on each team. In some simulations, certain participants are requested to function as members of a team faction. In this capacity, they serve in a dual role, i.e., as team members-at-large and as team members obligated to consider the particular views of a specific body or organization. As an example, several participants may constitute a NATO, SEATO, or UN faction within a US team and be charged with expressing the anticipated desires or reactions of that organization during team deliberations.

c. Project Staff Representatives. PSRs, who are Politico-Military Division Staff officers, are assigned to each team and the Control Group, and are full-fledged participants. Their special responsibilities are to brief the teams on administrative and procedural matters, serve as liaison officers between teams and Control, rule on technical points, and obtain Control guidance. Team PSRs advise Team Captains on such matters as the agenda for team meetings and the format for team messages. They also serve as intermediaries between the PMD Administrative Staff and the teams. The Control Group PSR is responsible for assisting the Conference Director in guiding Control Group discussions, assuring thorough consideration of team messages, and assisting the Director in preparation of scenario projections.
